

ABSTRACT

This research aims to test normatively and empirically about criminal law policies in eradication of corruption. As an effort aimed at creating right, fair and efficient regulations, criminal law policies always change according to social development, values and culture in the community. Studying and comparing the past regulations is expected to be able to find an ideal policy applied in legislation relating to eradicating corruption in the future.

